

A DUEL IN THE STREETS.

[From the New Orleans Picayune]

Shortly after two o'clock yesterday afternoon, T. B. Edwards and V. O. Aucoin fought their long expected duel on St. Louis street, between Royal and Chartres, immediately opposite the State House. After the duel, which was arranged to be fought last Thursday evening, had been prevented by the police, Messrs. Edwards and Aucoin determined to settle their dispute, growing out of the publication of numerous criminalizing and recriminating cards by a street raconteur.

Edwards was standing on the up-town side of St. Louis street, with his hand on the shoulder of a friend. In a few moments Aucoin made his appearance at the door of the Auditor's office and walked to a post on the edge of the banquet and stopped on the down-town side. Edwards beckoned to Aucoin, and a few words were exchanged, when Edwards remarked: "Is it going to be a fight or an apology?" Aucoin said he would not apologize, and Edwards thrust his hand into his overcoat pocket, as if to draw a weapon. Aucoin who was still standing against the post, drew a pistol and opened fire, which was returned by Edwards. The men exchanged a couple of shots from their first positions, when Edwards advanced to the side of the banquet on which his opponent was firing all the time. Aucoin changed his position slightly, so as to face the other, and kept firing. After emptying one pistol, Edwards threw it in the street and drew another, as did also Aucoin, who about this time was on the other side of the street. After firing about thirteen times without doing any damage, except indenting the brick walls on either side of the street, the men were stopped by the appearance of a policeman, who arrested them.

Aucoin, when firing stopped, walked across the street to Pierre Firmin's, and left two revolvers, which were afterward recovered. One pistol, a five-shooter was empty, and the other had been fired twice, showing that Aucoin had fired seven shots.

Edwards had only one pistol in his person when arrested, one chamber of which had been discharged, the other weapon having been discarded when it became useless. Both men were brought before Judge Miltenberger on charges of shooting in the street with intent to kill and carrying concealed weapons. They were released on bonds.

When the fusillade was over a gentleman remarked that it was strange persons would shoot in the street in that manner when shooting galleries were so plentiful.

At a recent aristocratic ball in London, at which the guests appeared in fancy costumes, she who is said to have attracted the most attention was "Young America." The young lady wore blue satin boots, with silver buttons, and a short white satin skirt, over which was gracefully draped a silk American flag, caught up at one side by a metal eagle. The bodice was blue silk covered with white stars, over which she wore a metal cuirass, on the front of which was the American shield, the eagle coming out beautifully. For ornaments she wore bracelets, and a necklace of gold dollars. On her head she wore a crown of thirteen stars in brilliant, the hair floating down the back. This was Kate Field.

Two young farmers desired the exclusive privilege of dancing with the same girl at Mount Vernon, Illinois. There was a quarrel, ending in an agreement to settle the question with a fight. The combatants and a few friends went to a barn; but before beginning the fight, one demanded that the other be searched, to see if he had any weapon. The search was not thorough, for the searched man drew a knife, on finding that he was being whipped, and inflicted a mortal wound.
